

THE ISSUE OF ADOLESCENCE

Moral problem: Different moral principles are widely debated in society, but our society does not obey them in practise, so teenagers are confused by the dual standards of moral norms and rebel against these double standards.

Issues of gender inequality: In our society, gender inequality is prevalent. Strict limits on teenage girls are in effect. They rebel in these circumstances whether they are emotionally tough or become prey to mental tensions and dynamic inferiority.

Issues related to emotional change: In puberty, great emotional changes occur. Adolescents are becoming greedier and they don't want to hurt their egos. Adolescents are interested in visions and hallucinations. In teenagers, this emotional disparity creates several issues.

Problems associated with mental change: In youth, mental changes are very rapid. In teenagers, there is fickle mindedness.

Sex related problems: Rapid growth and development of reproductive organs occurs during puberty. In teenagers, this results in an overwhelming desire for women. This triggers several issues associated with sex.

Social transition problems: Teenagers become more emotional in this time of rapid change. The convention of culture is generally faced with them. In social adaptation, the generation gap often creates obstacles.

Growth and development, education, childhood illnesses that persist into adolescence, mental health issues, and the effects of risky or illegal conduct, including injury, legal consequences, pregnancy, infectious diseases, and drug use issues, are the most common problems among teenagers. The leading causes of death and disability among adolescents are unintentional injuries resulting from motor vehicle crashes and injuries resulting from interpersonal violence.

AN EXAMPLE OF ADOLESCENCE

My family always made sure that I had enough freedom in life, so that they did not restrict me, but at the same time, that I was given the right direction.

I would never say that I was restricted in something, or that I was ever banned from doing something. Everyone knew that whenever I went somewhere, I would come back at the time we agreed on and if not, at least I would write that I would be late. When I was a very small child who couldn't go anywhere alone, someone from the family took me every time. Play basketball, football, take a walk and so on.

No one ever talked to me much about personal matters. There was no need, they still have a lot of trust in me and know that if I do something, it will not be thoughtless and I will consider all the circumstances.

I always had support in my interests. Do you want to play floorball?? Do you enjoy it? Go for it. I always got enough support no matter what.

All decisions in life are not right and I know that very well, everyone has to go through the wrong ones. The biggest decision I made so far was to move into an apartment with my girlfriend at the age of 17. Of course, it didn't bring the greatest joy at first, but after a few days, it didn't seem strange to anyone. When a person has humility and respect for others, everything can be managed.

Most young people live in ideas and opinions that are not realistically possible.

Typical. At eighteen, earning as much as a person after a 50-year career, knowing an awful lot about things we haven't experienced, and so on. Everyone was like that. Then it's up to the person to realize that it's not like that at all. That nothing is immediate, that everything requires a lot of effort and that today nobody will give us anything for free.
